

Respect Life Society – April 3, 2016

More from New Yorkers for Life about Physician Assisted Suicide- A terminal prognosis is difficult to predict. Patients would be eligible for assisted suicide if a doctor has diagnosed them with six months or less to live. Yet even doctors will admit to the inability to accurately predict life expectancy. Medical prognoses are based on statistical averages, and virtually everyone knows someone who has outlived the odds.